

Fiji

In Fiji, Education for Sustainable Development (ESD) is viewed as an extension of Environment Education (EE). Sustainable Development (SD) themes are appearing in universities. For example, the region's medical school has a course in environmental education and public health and a postgraduate diploma in environmental management and sustainable development. Universities are working towards more multi-disciplinary approaches. E-learning is especially important to the remote islands of Fiji. Research needs include integrating ESD into basic education and vocational/technical education and reorienting tertiary education to address sustainability.